

Hearing about this has really gotten my hopes up. I currently live in a cable company's virtual monopoly. I'm too far from a CO for dsl and not sure I'd even jump into that bureaucratic mess even if I wasn't.

I, in particular, and broadband customers, in general, need another option. This segment needs more competition as the current one is, imo and after several years as a customer, uncompetitive and perhaps corrupt.

I'd be thrilled to add another $50-65 a month to my BGE bill if it included 3500/384 broadband (static ip's would be good too).

Please help open this market to another competitor.
